On April 19th Commander Schoep, lead the march of our troop of Patriots to the White House. A truly great sight to see as they made their way down Constitutional Avenue with many flags flying as they passed the unwashed hoards of communists, anti-whites and the Jews. These are the very people who are out to destroy our America. Our party members and supporters held the heads high and proudly called out “USA, USA, USA”.

Once the march reached the White House Lawn, the speeches began as we proclaimed our opposition to the Illegal Immigration that is ravishing our land. One of the speakers, Brian Holland, from NSM Virginia announced his campaign for President of the United States of America. He has received the NSM’s official Endorsement as our candidate for President.

It was an honor to see veteran Waffen SS Theo Junker in the march and to hear his speech. As a man of great honor he told the truth about National Socialism and how our country could be saved from the destructive course that the present government is leading us down. He countered the lies told by our enemies, the perverts, homosexuals, anarchists, communists. Our anti-immigration message was heard loud and clear.

Continued on next page
Continued from page one

The Friday evening the 2008 Nationals were held and again were a great success, with a theme on Honor, duty and loyalty. All party members present at the Washington DC rally were issued the new black uniform with NSM patch for street rallies. Our traditional Brownshirts will be worn for private functions, Nationals and ceremonials.

For all party members and supporters who were able to make the trip to Washington we thank you.

"If you are not part of the solution, you are part of the problem."

Commander Schoep

Some of the photos taken over the weekend.
Financial Meltdown

The Federal Reserve has temporarily averted a financial meltdown by violating 80 years worth of policy by starting up its printing presses to inject billions more dollars into Wall Street to stop major bank failures. How long this band-aid will hold is anyone’s guess. The New York Times is celebrating this shaky short-term patch job: “Stocks started the second quarter with a soaring rally on Tuesday that sent the Dow Jones industrial average up nearly 400 points, its best performance in two weeks, as investors found reasons to take heart in a fresh round of mortgage-related write-offs at UBS and Deutsche Bank and a capital infusion at Lehman Brothers, the brokerage firm.”

Those are the latest financial institutions, once thought of as rock-solid, which are now swirling around the bowl and will probably require Bear Stearns-style bailouts. Historians who are sufficiently cynical and unkind might point out that there were a number of spectacular “rallies” in the stock market during the weeks after October 1929, as well. The Times article continues “Adding to the good feelings, Lehman said private investors had snapped up a $4 billion offering of preferred stock ‘far more than expected’ in a move to dispel a swirl of rumors about its stability. Shares of Lehman jumped 17 percent. UBS said it would try a similar move with $15 billion in additional funds; its shares rose 15 percent.”

None of this does anything to stop the subprime mortgage crisis, which a recent report said would involve losses 400% greater than early predictions. These corporate bailouts do nothing to help the poor working class slob who is about to lose his home. Hopefully he can find a double-wide that’s not taken over by Mexican illegals or formerly upper class Whites whose jobs got outsourced. The sky high fuel prices and soaring food costs are not helping as retailers jack up their prices to allow for inflation. Too bad Joe Six-pack can’t adjust his pay check or bank account balance accordingly. Virtually everything we buy is moved by 18 wheelers and they must pay $4.00 per gallon for diesel fuel which can’t help but drive up prices further. The filthy rich politicians in $5,000 suits tell us there’s nothing that can be done while the ordinary guys in blue jeans and work shirts have been screwed, again.
They are even blaming Darwin for the Holocaust

In the new science-bashing movie Expelled: No Intelligence Allowed, Ben Stein and the rest of the filmmakers sincerely and seriously argue that Charles Darwin’s theory of evolution paved the way for the Holocaust. By “seriously,” I mean that Ben Stein acts grief-stricken and the director juxtaposes quotes from evolutionary biologists with archival newsreel clips from Hitler’s Reich. Prepare for an intellectual night at the cinema.

No one could have been more surprised than I when the producers called, unbiden, offering Scientific American’s editors a private screening. Given that our magazine’s positions on evolution and intelligent design (ID) creationism reflect those of the scientific mainstream (that is, evolution: good science; ID: not science), you have to wonder why they would bother. It’s not as though anything in Expelled would have been likely to change our views. And they can’t have been looking for a critique of the science in the movie, because there isn’t much to speak of.

Rather, it seems a safe bet that the producers hope a whipping from us would be useful for publicity: further proof that any mention of ID outrages the close-minded establishment. (Picture Ben Stein as Jack Nicholson, shouting, “You can’t handle the truth!”) Knowing this, we could simply ignore the movie—which might also suit their purposes, come to think of it. Unfortunately, Expelled is a movie not quite harmless enough to be ignored. Shrugging off most of the film’s attacks—all recycled from previous pro-ID works—would be easy, but its heavy-handed linkage of modern biology to the Holocaust demands a response for the sake of simple human decency.

Expelled wears its ambitions to be a creationist Fahrenheit 911 openly, in that it apes many of Michael Moore’s comic tricks: emphasizing the narrator’s hapless everyman qualities by showing him meandering his way to interviews; riposting interviewees’ words with ironic old footage and so on. Director Nathan Frankowski is reasonably adept at the techniques, although he is not half the filmmaker Michael Moore is (and yes, I do mean in both senses of the phrase).

The film begins with the triumphant entry of financial columnist, media figure and former Nixon White House speechwriter Ben Stein to a filled college lecture hall. (If this review were styled after the movie, I’d be intercutting clips of Nixon flashing a victory sign with Stein’s scenes from Ferris Bueller’s Day Off and his eyedrop commercials, but you get the idea.) Stein explains that he is speaking out because he has “lately noticed a dire trend” that threatens the state of our nation: the ascendance of godless, materialist, evolutionary science and an unwillingness among academics to consider more theistic alternatives. A montage of short clips then shows Richard Dawkins, Daniel Dennett and other scientists scorning religion or ID without context. “Freedom is the essence of America!” Stein insists, and he frets that scientists who like their empiricism with a dash of deus ex machina are oppressed. He and Expelled charge that scientists, in their rejection of religious explanations, have become as intolerant as Nazis. Or maybe Stalinists—the film clips were ambiguous on that point.

(The newsreel footage from the old Soviet days kept confusing me. Stein does know that the Stalinists rejected the theory of evolution as a biological rendition of capitalism, doesn't he? And that they replaced it with their own ideologically driven, disastrous theory of Lysenkoism? Does Stein think that moviegoers won't know this?)
THE HAGUE, 09/04/08 - A primary school in Amsterdam wished to provide its pupils with an understanding for other cultures. But during a visit to a mosque, the children were told they were dogs. With a view to developing understanding and respect for other cultures among children, primary school De Horizon regularly organises outings to various religious organisations. The chairman of the El Mouchidine mosque told the children from group 7 (aged 10) and their chaperones however that non-Muslims are dogs.

In a letter to the children's parents, the school expresses its regret at the incident: "We are shocked that during the guided tour, the mosque's chairman told the children and chaperoning parents that non believers were dogs. We consider this statement as unacceptable since we allow our children to partake in this project to develop respect for freedom of religious choice".

In the meantime, the school's management has addressed the mosque on the undesirable behaviour of the chairman. Both parties will say nothing further on the matter. "We will resolve the matter amongst ourselves and I have no inclination whatsoever to discuss the matter with the media", as newspaper De Telegraaf quoted the school's spokesperson Mariet ten Berge. "We have been to the mosque before and it always went well".

Angry parents had sent the letter on to De Telegraaf but were reportedly rapped on the knuckles by the school's management. "The school wishes to play this down. That is precisely the problem", as one mother commented.

Armed man with Screwdriver, killed by Cop.

An off-duty police officer shot and killed a man who was allegedly breaking into a car in a northwest Houston parking lot armed with a screwdriver, KPRC Local 2 reported Friday. Houston police said the 24-year veteran officer was visiting a friend at an apartment complex on West Tidwell Road near Wheatley Street when he heard glass breaking at about 1:30 a.m.

Investigators said Sgt. C.W. Jones looked out the window and saw what he believed to be a car burglary in progress. "As he approached the car, he did not see anyone at all," Capt. Bruce Williams said. "(He) got a little closer, saw that there was a suspect actually inside the vehicle." Jones identified himself during the confrontation with the man, officials said. "He said he was a Houston police officer and to exit the vehicle," Williams said. "That’s when the suspect did, of course, exit, but he lunged toward the officer in an aggressive manner." Jones stepped back and fired at least one shot at the man because he feared for his life, police said. The man, identified as 28-year-old Timothy Stokes, died at the scene from a gunshot wound to the chest. Detectives said they did not find a gun on Stokes, but found a large screwdriver, which police consider a weapon. Stokes’ mother said her son should not have lost his life. "He can’t tell his side of the story. A dead man can’t talk," Barbara Stokes said. "I can’t express myself. I feel empty inside. I can’t believe this happened to him this way." Some residents said they doubt deadly force was necessary. "He could have did something else," resident Elisabeth Oveal said. "He could have hit him, Tasered him or anything besides killing him." Jones does not work at the apartment complex but is assigned to a patrol in the area. Stokes was the youngest of 12 children. "(He’s) the baby. He didn’t deserve that," Barbara Stokes said.
Arrogance in LA

The Hispanic power lobby has become so arrogant and so confident in the coming amnesty which has been promised to them by all three presidential candidates, that local officials now feel confident in flipping Federal law enforcement the bird and telling them to back off from doing their jobs.

According to the Daily Breeze web site, “L.A. Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa warned that work-site raids on ‘nonexploitative’ businesses could have a severe impact on the local economy. Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa is asking federal officials to rethink their policy on workplace immigration crackdowns that involve established businesses and to focus on employers that mistreat workers instead.”

In other words, don’t throw illegal aliens out of the country, give them special treatment to make sure their criminal behavior is easier and more comfortable by harassing employers that are mean to them…a privileged and protected status certainly not enjoyed by any native born American workers, who could probably use some Federal assistance against abusive employers who work them like dogs, pay them subsistence wages and deny them medical benefits.

The Daily Breeze goes on: “The mayor said in a letter to Homeland Security Secretary Michael Chertoff that work-site raids by Immigration and Customs Enforcement could have ‘severe and long-lasting effects’ on the local economy, the Los Angeles Times reported Thursday.”

Yes, they force employers to hire American citizens and to pay Americans decent wages and give them at least partial benefits. This can have a severe and long-lasting effect on capitalism’s profits, true.

The Daily Breeze notes “ICE made more than 4,900 work-site arrests nationwide in fiscal 2007, a 45-fold increase over the number in 2001, authorities said. More than 130 undocumented workers were arrested at a San Fernando Valley manufacturing company in February and over 60 workers were arrested for immigration violations at South Bay-area warehouses last week. Los Angeles companies such as clothing manufacturer American Apparel Inc. have reported being questioned by ICE officials about their hiring procedures.”

Why can’t these Latino politicians and their little Jewish friends in the sweatshop industries wait another seven months, for crying out loud? All three presidential candidates have more or less signed off on total amnesty for the 20 million illegal Third World aliens among us. You’re telling me it’s going to kill these people to just lie low for seven more months, before any pretence of enforcing the law ends? Can they genuinely not bear to see their obscene profits reduced and Americans given decent-paying jobs?

Tulsa police have arrested an off-duty McDonald’s employee after he shot a customer.

According to police, the employee began arguing with the customer in the parking lot of the restaurant, located near 71st and Riverside. The man then got out of his truck, that is when police say the employee pulled a gun and began shooting. The victim, a 21-year-old, was shot in the chest one time. He was transported to a hospital, where he remains in critical condition. The suspect, Erik Thurman, 26, left the scene immediately following the shooting. He went to his apartment complex, where he turned himself in to security, who in turn called police. Thurman is being held in the Tulsa County Jail for shooting with intent to kill and five other outstanding warrants.
Three Police officers on Trial for death of Sean Bell

Two days before closing arguments in the trial of three police officers charged in the fatal shooting of Sean Bell, the two men who were with Bell that night reiterated their call for the officers to be found guilty. "You hope they get what they deserve," Trent Benefield said Saturday. Benefield was in Bell's Nissan Altima on Nov. 25, 2006, when three undercover NYPD officers fired 50 shots, killing Bell and striking Benefield three times and Joseph Guzman 19 times.

Detectives Michael Oliver, Gescard Isnora and Marc Cooper have been on a nonjury trial since Feb. 25. Bell, 23, and his group had just finished his bachelor party at the Kalua Cabaret strip club when the fatal encounter occurred. Oliver and Isnora were charged with first- and second-degree manslaughter and with assault. Cooper is charged with second-degree reckless endangerment. The cops' self-defense argument is based on their belief that someone in Bell's group had a gun, although none was found. Evidence that Bell's car accelerated into Isnora is being used to bolster the defense argument that the car was utilized as a deadly weapon.

Michael Palladino, president of the Detectives Endowment Association, said Saturday the case in the hands of the judge, "who will make his decision based on the credibility -- or lack thereof -- of witnesses like Joseph Guzman and Trent Benefield."

Outside the National Action Network headquarters of the Rev. Al Sharpton, who earlier called for convictions of the three officers, Guzman said Saturday he would not venture a prediction of which way state Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Cooperman will rule. "I can't read this judge," Guzman said. "He's got a poker face." Closing arguments by prosecutors and defense attorneys are scheduled Monday.

During his weekly live radio broadcast at the Harlem headquarters earlier Saturday, Sharpton said he hoped that a verdict would bring permanent change in New York's criminal justice system and the NYPD. "If we can't make permanent change now, we never will," Sharpton said.

Nicole Paultre Bell, Bell's fiancee, thanked those in attendance. "Through all the rumors, through all the negatives, through all the distractions," she said, "you guys have been there."

Making a killing from the world food crisis

Much of the news coverage of the world food crisis has focussed on riots in low-income countries, where workers and others cannot cope with skyrocketing costs of staple foods. But there is another side to the story: the big profits that are being made by huge food corporations and investors. Cargill, the world's biggest grain trader, achieved an 86% increase in profits from commodity trading in the first quarter of this year. Bunge, another huge food trader, had a 77% increase in profits during the last quarter of last year. ADM, the second largest grain trader in the world, registered a 67% per cent increase in profits in 2007.

Nor are retail giants taking the strain: profits at Tesco, the UK supermarket giant, rose by a record 11.8% last year. Other major retailers, such as France's Carrefour and Wal-Mart of the US, say that food sales are the main sector sustaining their profit increases. Investment funds, running away from sliding stock markets and the credit crunch, are having a heyday on the commodity markets, driving prices out of reach for food importers like Bangladesh and the Philippines.

Agricultural policy has lost touch with its most basic goal: that of feeding people. Rather than rethink their own disastrous policies, governments and think tanks are blaming production problems, the growing demand for food in China and India, and biofuels. While these have played a role, the fundamental cause of today's food crisis is neoliberal globalisation itself, which has transformed food from a source of livelihood security into a mere commodity to be gambled away, even at the cost of widespread hunger among the world's poorest people.

[ There is a game like chess going on here and it looks like a possible check-mate by the international financiers and big corporations. They don't care about the billions of pawns they bred over the last few decades any more. Now they are in a position to possess the world. There's no reason why other than a twisted megalomania. Nature will sort it all out eventually. ]
Hans Baur was born in Ampfing, Bavaria on the 19th June 1897 later moving to Munich with his parent. Here he was educated and in August 1914, when he was 17 he tried to enlist in the Bavarian Infantry but was refused because he was too small and told to wait until he had grown taller and stronger. In September 1915 he joined the Koerniglich Bayerischen Fliegertruppen (Royal Bavarian Air Service) and served his country. During WW1 he was credited with 6 kills and 3 uncriteded.

In 1918 by the end of WW1 Germany he had been decorated with the Iron Cross First Class, Iron Cross Second Class, Bavarian Military Silver Medal for Valor and the Bavarian Military Merit Cross and had been promoted to Vice Sergeant Major and he had earned a well-earned reputation for his skill as a pilot. After the war he joined the German airline Bayerischer Luft-Lloyd (later to become LuftHansa) as a civilian pilot. During the next few years he became interested in the NSDAP and became friends with the Fuehrer Adolf Hitler and during the elections tour in 1932 flew the Fuehrer around the country to give his addresses. In 1933 Baur received the Golden Party badge for being an early member of the NSDAP.

1933 when Hitler became the Reich Chancellor of Germany Hans Baur became his personal Pilot and in charge of the “Fliegerstaffel des Fuehrers” Hitler’s elite Personal Squadron. From that day forward Hans Baur progressed in his job serving his Fuehrer with honor and dignity and gained the full trust of the Fuehrer.

At the end of the war after the Fuehrer’s death he escaped the bunker with Martin Bormann but they were separated shortly after and Hans Baur was suffered severe injuries and was captured by the advancing Russian Army. His nightmare was just about to begin. He was to suffer torture and many hours of interrogation as they Russians did not believe that Hitler had died. Stalin was certain that Hans Baur had flown Hitler to a place of safety. In the years to follow he attempted suicide to escape his torturers, but finally he was release in October 1955 he was released and allowed to return home. He recovered his health with the help of his loving family and lived in retirement on his war veterans pension until he reached the grand age of 95 when he died on the 17th February 1993. He remained devoted to Hitler and the National Socialist ideal until his death. His loyalty will forever be remembered.

Sieg Heil.
Rationing already here?

Increased fuel costs have recently caused food prices to rise dramatically since everything travels by diesel truck. Now it looks as though we may be seeing food shortages. The developing food crisis may prove to be the ultimate straw that breaks the camel’s back even more so than the skyrocketing cost of fuel and energy and the instability of the financial markets. It’s hitting us so suddenly and without warning that almost anything could happen next.

According to the [1] New York Sun: “Many parts of America, long considered the breadbasket of the world, are now confronting a once unthinkable phenomenon: food rationing. Major retailers in New York, in areas of New England, and on the West Coast are limiting purchases of flour, rice, and cooking oil as demand outstrips supply. There are also anecdotal reports that some consumers are hoarding grain stocks.”

The [2] Sun goes on: “At a Costco Warehouse in Mountain View, Calif., yesterday, shoppers grew frustrated and occasionally uttered expletives as they searched in vain for the large sacks of rice they usually buy. ‘Where’s the rice?’ an engineer from Palo Alto, Calif., Yajun Liu, said. ‘You should be able to buy something like rice. This is ridiculous.’ The bustling store in the heart of Silicon Valley usually sells four or five varieties of rice to a clientele largely of Asian immigrants, but only about half a pallet of Indian-grown Basmati rice was left in stock. A 20-pound bag was selling for $15.99.”

The first signs of rationing are here.

The [3] Sun article notes ” ‘Due to the limited availability of rice, we are limiting rice purchases based on your prior purchasing history,’ a sign above the dwindling supply said. Shoppers said the limits had been in place for a few days, and that rice supplies had been spotty for a few weeks. A store manager referred questions to officials at Costco headquarters near Seattle, who did not return calls or e-mail messages yesterday. An employee at the Costco store in Queens said there were no restrictions on rice buying, but limits were being imposed on purchases of oil and flour. Internet postings attributed some of the shortage at the retail level to bakery owners who flocked to warehouse stores when the price of flour from commercial suppliers doubled.”

The [4] Sun continues: “The curbs and shortages are being tracked with concern by survivalists who view the phenomenon as a harbinger of more serious trouble to come. ‘It’s sporadic. It’s not every store, but it’s becoming more commonplace,’ the editor of Survival Blog.com, James Rawles, said. ‘The number of reports I’ve been getting from readers who have seen signs posted with limits has increased almost exponentially, I’d say in the last three to five weeks.’ Spiking food prices have led to riots in recent weeks in Haiti, Indonesia, and several African nations. India recently banned export of all but the highest quality rice, and Vietnam blocked the signing of (a) new contract for foreign rice sales. ‘I’m surprised the Bush administration hasn’t slapped export controls on wheat,’ Mr. Rawles said. ‘The Asian countries are here buying every kind of wheat.’

Perhaps Mr. Bush was too busy drawing up plans for a war on Iran.

The times we live in are becoming more and more interesting. The stock market and the subprime mortgage crisis are knocking over financial dominoes left and right. The high gas prices are painful and many people have already cut back on driving. Eating, however, is something no one can cut back on beyond a certain point without descending to a Third World standard. All of the other problems can still be glossed over and probably will be for some time to come; food prices and food shortages and food rationing and just plain unavailability can’t be.